Teachers give working conditions high grades

Charles County teachers are generally satisfied with their working conditions, but would like to play a larger role in the decision-making processes, according to results of the statewide Teaching, Empowering, Leading and Learning (TELL) Maryland survey.

The survey asked educators to rate items in nine areas including: time, facilities and resources, community support and involvement, managing student conduct, teacher leadership, school leadership, professional development, instructional practices and support and overall. Results for the state, county and individual schools are posted at www.tellmaryland.org.

Charles County's results show that more than 90 percent of educators feel they have access to sufficient resources, including technology, and that they work in school environments that are clean and well maintained. Additionally, more than 90 percent of respondents indicated they believe teachers provide parents and guardians with useful information about student learning and that the school maintains clear, two-way communications with the community.

Teachers also said they work in a safe school environment and students and faculty make every effort to stop bullying in school. Teachers indicated students at the school understand expectations for their conduct. The majority of teachers said they are working in a safe environment where the administra-

AFLAC open enrollment ends on December 2

Open Enrollment for AFLAC Unreimbursed Medical and Dependent Day Care Flexible Spending accounts (FSAs) is November 14 through December 2.

The Unreimbursed Medical Flexible Spending Account now includes the debit card program. Plan participants can benefit from pretax savings on out-of-pocket expenses at doctor's offices and pharmacies with the card.

Current policy holders can change benefits, which could result in lower rates and better coverage. Employees who may have been previously denied benefits may qualify for this year only.

Employees must re-enroll in FSAs each year. The contributions do not carry over from year-to-year. AFLAC representatives are available to meet with employees at each school and center.

Schools offering flu shot clinics

Charles County Public Schools and the Charles County Department of Health are offering free flu vaccinations for students. Students in middle and high school have the opportunity to receive the flu vaccine from the health department at school-based clinics that are open after school hours. An adult must accompany and sign for any student younger than age 18. Clinics are planned at the following schools: Thomas Stone High School, 3-7 p.m., Nov. 15; and La Plata High School, 3-7 p.m., Nov. 17.

FEA students recognized

More than 220 Charles County Public Schools students were recognized for their participation in the Future Educators Association (FEA) during an induction ceremony held Wednesday, Oct. 26, at Maurice J. McDonough High School. Student members are asked to pledge to serve as role models for their participation in FEA by promoting a positive attitude toward education to enhance the quality of educational programs. Student chapters will participate in the fourth annual Charles County Public Schools local FEA conference on Friday, Dec. 9, at the College of Southern Maryland's La Plata campus.

McDonough choir to perform

Maurice J. McDonough High School's chamber choir, Madrigal Lords and Ladies, will perform at the Mormon Visitor's Center in Kensington for the "Festival of Lights" program. The event will be on Dec. 7, with the choir performing at 7 p.m. and 8 p.m.

New ethics policy limits gifts, provides regulations for conflicts of interest

The Board of Education on Nov. 8 approved changes to its ethics policy that provide more stringent financial disclosures and conflict of interest standards as well as reduce the value of gifts employees may receive.

Major differences for employees are conflict of interest and gift regulations. Conflicts of interest are more clearly defined, especially concerning business entities in which an employee has any interests. The new ethics policy does not allow participation by an employee with a business entity in which the employee or an immediate family member has a financial interest. For example, if an employee's spouse works for a company doing business with the school system, the employee should not be involved in any school system transactions with that company.

In addition to financial matters, conflicts of interest also include post-employment restrictions, using prestige of office, acceptance of gifts, use of confidential information and procurement restrictions. Gift limitations were changed this year to match state regulations. The limit for individual gifts has been lowered from $50 to $20, but a series of gifts may be accepted up to $100 in value. This change took effect immediately when the Board approved the new policy.

Additionally, changes were made to disclosure of confidential information. New language states that employees may not use confidential information that they acquire through their employment for their economic benefit or the economic benefit of another person.

Most changes affect only Board of Education members and candidates filing to run for the Board. The largest change requires Board members and candidates to file more detailed forms that include interests in real property, interests in corporations and partnerships, interests in entities doing business with the Board, employment with entities doing business with the Board, indebtedness to entities doing business with the Board, lists of family members employed by the Board, sources of earned income and gifts received.

Certain employees, including the Superintendent, executive staff, principals and some administrative employees, must file an annual statement with the Charles County Board of Education Ethics Panel that discloses gifts received from any person that contracts with or is under the authority of the school system and any potential conflicts of interest. Employees required to file financial disclosure statements are listed in the policy.

Legislation passed in 2010 by the Maryland General Assembly mandated that boards of education adopt ethics regulations that are as stringent as the state's rules.

The three-month process to change the ethics regulations included review and preliminary approval by the State Ethics Commission. The Board now submits its approved ethics regulations to the state for final approval or disapproval.

The Charles County Board of Education Ethics Panel consists of five members appointed by the Board of Education. Panel members serve four-year terms and their terms begin on July 1 prior to the regular election of Charles County Board of Education members. Panel members are William F. Olmstead, Jessie Morris, Anthony Rainey, Ray Johnson and Lorence Kessler. Olmstead, a local attorney, is the chairman.

Anyone who knows of an ethics violation may file a complaint directly with the Charles County Board of Education Ethics Panel, P.O. Box 2770, La Plata, MD 20646.

A complete copy of the new ethics regulations can be found in the Board policies located in BoardDocs or at <http://www2.ccboc.com/staffservices.cfm>.

tion supports teachers' efforts to maintain classroom discipline and policies.

Steve Perakis, coordinator of evaluation, presented results this week to the Board of Education and said a supportive environment is important to help teachers and students to do well. The survey, he said, is a measure of how supportive a school is in terms of community, student conduct, professional development and more. In most categories, he said, teachers ranked their positive responses higher than the state averages.

Deputy Superintendent Ronald Cunningham said the results help principals by reaffirming many of the things they know are going well and by pointing out areas where we need to do more work. The responses, Cunningham said, are from "the people who are living in the buildings and they are reporting back that they are feeling good about their school facilities year round."

Highlights from Charles County Public Schools survey include:

- Teachers gave positive marks to the availability of reliable technology and working in school environments that are clean and well maintained. In both areas, at least 92 percent of teachers agreed.
- Most teachers supported the statement that the physical environment of classrooms in their schools support teaching and learning, that they have access to appropriate instructional materials and resources and that they are generally happy teaching at their current school.

- Countywide, teachers indicated they use assessment data to inform their instruction, but they do not feel state assessment data are available in time to impact instructional practices. Teachers also gave lower marks when ranking their autonomy to make decisions about instructional delivery, such as pacing, materials and pedagogy.

- Teachers indicated they would like more input in decision-making – both at the classroom and school level. Teachers also indicated they would like more staff development opportunities and new teacher support through mentors.

The results are from a survey taken in the spring by nearly 46,000 educators statewide and 2,518 Charles County Public Schools teachers and site-based licensed educators. Charles County Public Schools 90.6 percent response rate was well above the 51.9 state average. This is the second time teachers have responded to the survey, and the 2011 survey included education support personnel, which includes school-based teaching assistants and clerical and office staff who provide support to teachers and administrators. The first TELL survey was conducted in 2009.

Board of Education honors exemplary employees

Four exemplary Charles County Public Schools (CCPS) employees were honored by the Board of Education on November 8. Honored were Theresa (Wanda) Proctor, Lori Gould, Mary Kate Long and Jillian Durr.

Proctor is a school counselor at Benjamin Stoddert Middle School. She was nominated for working with outside organizations to bring programs to Stoddert, taking leadership courses to improve her skills set and working beyond the regular work day to help any student, parent or staff member in need. Stoddert Principal Robert Babiak said Proctor plans to eventually become an administrator and works with the administrative team, team leaders and department chairs to make certain the counselors are supporting the instructional program for all students. "Proctor has an excellent rapport with staff, students, parents and the community," Babiak wrote in a nomination letter.

Gould is a prekindergarten/LEEP instructional assistant at Malcolm Elementary School. She was nominated for demonstrating the highest level of expertise as she works with students, excelling in all aspects of her work and volunteering for extra duties and activities. Malcolm Principal Wilhelmina Pugh said Gould shows a sincere interest in students as individuals and is consistently fair in dealing with them. "Gould truly understands the importance of fostering positive relationships with students and their families," Pugh wrote in a nomination letter.

Long is a reading resource teacher at Dr. Thomas L. Higdon Elementary School. She was nominated for recognition for providing staff development opportunities at the school and county levels, successfully coordinating the reading interventions at the school for students needing additional reading support and taking on extra duties. Higdon Principal Kathleen Morgan describes Long as a "jack of all trades" for the many tasks that she does every day to make the school a better place for teaching and learning. "It is a great honor to have such an exceptional teacher such as Mrs. Mary Kate Long working with students and families at Dr. Higdon Elementary School," Morgan wrote in a nomination letter.

Durr is an elementary school teacher at Dr. James Craik Elementary School. She was nominated for recognition for expanding her professional skills, providing help to countless committees and always willing to work with teachers, students and parents to ensure her students are getting everything they need to grasp concepts being taught to become independent learners. Craik Principal Penny Nye said Durr is a teacher that goes above and beyond to help her students be successful. "Miss Jillian Durr is a great asset to Dr. James Craik Elementary School," Nye wrote in a nomination letter.
